Betting on Mali

Over the last few years, all Malians have mobilised to consolidate the peace in Mali. The country is recovering from a period of insecurity and uncertainty and its people are stronger and more determined than ever to build a better future for all.

Inspired by this push for peace, the government has developed and implemented a series of reforms to facilitate investments, entrepreneurship, and job creations with a view to promoting and unleashing the country's full economic potential.

Farming and raising livestock are transforming into agribusiness and are feeding the entire sub-region. The energy sector is supporting industrial growth, and the infrastructure is ensuring inclusive and sustainable growth. There are advantages that can be capitalized upon and developed; there are challenges the people of Mali are ready to face, pushed forward by the dynamic and motivated young people in the country.

In this context, the organisation of the Invest in Mali Forum in December is a key step in the process of transforming our comparative advantages into a competitive edge to make Mali the hub of West Africa.

I am very happy to be welcoming all investors to Bamako next 7 and 8 December and would like to thank them in advance for their participation in this significant event.

President of the Republic, Head of State

Located in the heart of West Africa, Mali is a veritable cultural melting pot with a population of 18 million, half of whom are under 15 years old. With its dynamic and determined youth and its rich natural resources, Mali has always been very influential in the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

ECOWAS is a common market of 300 million consumers that is projected to increase to 600 million by 2050. Now that it has restored its strong growth, Mali has the potential to meet the needs of this market in terms of energy, agriculture, and livestock.

4 investment sectors

AGRICULTURE

Agriculture accounts for 39.5% of Mali's GDP. Mali is the second largest producer of cotton in Africa at 500,000 tons per year. Modernising this sector means transforming comparative advantages (land, climate, water, and labour) into the engine of the economy.

LIVESTOCK

Mali is the country in the West African Economic and Monetary Union with the most livestock. Its unique traditional expertise is recognised and the quality of its meat is admired throughout the sub-region.

ENERGY

By 2030, Mali will have a total deficit in energy efficiency of 22,600 GWh. However, solar, hydro and biomass are all natural resources that could be developed to achieve energy independence over the same period.

INFRASTRUCTURE

Infrastructure development will guarantee inclusive growth that benefits everyone. There is significant need for irrigation and many forms of transportation (air transportation, railways, road transportation, and river transportation).
