About Conference

Globalized business expansion and ease of doing business have significantly pushed the numbers and volume of transactions to the next higher level. The nature of transactions with related parties as well as with open market players has become increasingly complex. This has increased the pressure of stakeholders and regulators to keep track of how transparency is maintained by the organizations when they report business performance and value propositions. The quality as well as the timely disclosures of the financial reports is extremely critical for investors, government agencies, regulatory bodies, auditors, as well as for the management as it not only satisfies the mandatory compliance requirements and regulations but also helps the organizations in various ways i.e., raising capital, reassurance, and financial analysis.

The non-financial disclosures are equally becoming important over and above the financial disclosures. The reporting and compliance requirements under BRSR are bringing about greater levels of transparency and accountability. The integration of non-financial risk indicators in the architectural design is focusing on the entire spectrum of business ecosystem including- community, shareholders, investors, bankers, policy regulators, employees, customers, and the supply chain.

Incorporation of an Annual Transparency Report by NFRA as part of the reporting framework, ESG compliances, application of AI tools to enhance the accuracy and efficiency of financial reporting, and a lot more is emerging to build a robust, ethical and support a strong governance system.

Given the extreme relevance of the subject, ASSOCHAM is organizing its 3rd International Conference on "Financial Reporting and Control: Recent Developments and Challenges". The conference will be addressed by officials from government and regulatory bodies, national and international eminent practitioners, industry experts from various sectors including accounting, auditing, regulatory, technology, financial reporting background.
